 SOURCE: I have a 2005 c50 suzuki it has a lot of valve or timing chain noise. When correctly set, the valves can be quite loud on startup on these bikes, sometimes described as the "angry sewing machine". I would prefer that they be to the "loud" side than too quiet, as a tight exhaust valve can cause it to be burned from prolonged contact with the seat.

 Hi, I just bought an 07 C50 and would like to adjust the valves. Where can I find the procedure? So I am told, a special tool is needed to adjust the valve lash, can the valve lash be adjusted without the special tool?? if not where can I get the tool ? they are out of stock at the dealer Thanks Don

 I recently purchased a Suzuki M50 and the valves seem noisy to me. I had the place I bought it from and another place listen both said it was normal. Anybody else have the same noise from the bike's engine? The noise is a clattering type noise more noticeable at higher rpms. My bike is a 2006. Any help would be appreciated. Thank you.
