Most people who need inpatient hospital services are admitted to an "acute-care" hospital for a relatively short stay. But some people may need a longer hospital stay. Long-term care hospitals (LTCHs) are certified as acute-care hospitals, but LTCHs focus on patients who, on average, stay more than 25 days.

I have worked in LTC on and off for the past six years, so I will comprise a list of what I believe are the cons of this type of nursing. Cons: 1. The acuity level in LTC is rising due to pressure to get patients out of the hospital faster. The LTC facility where I am employed often gets patients who are only 2 days postop.
