Construction management is a procurement route in which the works are constructed by a number of different trade contractors. These trade contractors are contracted to the client but managed by a construction manager. The construction manager acts as an agent for the client, administering and co-ordinating the works contracts. Procurement route - Designing Buildings Wiki
The traditional procurement route involves separating design from construction. The client first appoints consultants to design the project in detail and to ensure cost control and inspect the construction works as they proceed. Contractors are then invited to submit tenders for the construction of the project on a single-stage competitive basis. Traditional procurement method - Designing Buildings Wiki As an industrial process, construction is unique in that the method of procurement of any built asset (building, infrastructure or process plant) defines many of the subsequent management processes that take place during the building phase - a very different situation to the purchase of goods and services in most other industries. Building Procurement: Amazon.co.uk: Morledge, Roy, Smith ... In building construction, material procurement is the process by which the materials required to construct a building are selected, ordered, invoiced, paid for and delivered to the site. A procurement team, or one or more construction buyers may be responsible for procurement activities for products, materials, plant and subcontractors. Material procurement - Designing Buildings Wiki A plethora of procurement strategies have been developed to deal with the need to successfully deliver building projects (e.g., RICS 1996). A procurement strategy outlines the key means by which the objectives of the project are to be achieved (NSW, 2005).  Procurement practice is by necessity very diverse and depends on both the type of client - private or public - and the complexity of a project. For example, the government's "build, build, build" programme relies on investment to deliver the levelling-up agenda and enables the public-sector infrastructure clients to provide their supply chain with the certainty of a large and secure pipeline.
