Launched in 1991, the Asian Yearbook of International Law is a major internationally-refereed yearbook dedicated to international legal issues as seen primarily from an Asian perspective. It is published under the auspices of the Foundation for the Development of International Law in Asia (DILA) in collaboration with DILA-Korea, the Secretariat of DILA, in South Korea. When it was launched, the Yearbook was the first publication of its kind, edited by a team of leading international law scholars from across Asia. It provides a forum for the publication of articles in the field of international law and other Asian international legal topics. The objectives of the Yearbook are two-fold. First, to promote research, study and writing in the field of international law in Asia; and second, to provide an intellectual platform for the discussion and dissemination of Asian views and practices on contemporary international legal issues. Each volume of the Yearbook contains articles and shorter notes; a section on Asian state practice; an overview of the Asian states' participation in multilateral treaties and succinct analysis of recent international legal developments in Asia; a bibliography that provides information on books, articles, notes, and other materials dealing with international law in Asia; as well as book reviews. This publication is important for anyone working on international law and in Asian studies.

This book traces the development of trade unions in Peninsular

Malaysia over the last century from colonial times to the early 1990's, stressing the key role of the state in shaping the role and nature of organized labour during various time periods. Trade unions were not allowed in British Malaya before 1940. After the Japanese Occupation, organized labour was effectively mobilized by the left, and contributed significantly to the anti-colonial struggle for Independence. However, from 1948 severe repression directed against the left brought an abrupt end to this development. From the early 1950's, the colonial authorities sought to wean support from the communist-led insurgency by encouraging moderate or responsible unionists, but this did not prevent the resurgence of labour militancy in the mid-1950's on the eve of Independence. After a brief honeymoon period with the post-colonial government, union activity mounted again in the 1960's until repression against the left from the mid-1960's took its toll. Extra-parliamentary rule after the May 1969 riots saw increased government efforts to subordinate labour to economic developmental priorities, particularly those of export-orientated industrialization. In the early 1970's, however, there were also concessions to organized labour in an attempt to promote tripartite corporatism. But in the late 1970's, however, there has been further subordination of labour to a changing developmentalist agenda increasingly favourable to private business interests.

Author's account on Ahmad Nor, a Labour leader and politician in Malaysia.

Mengurus Konflik Gaya Streetsmart

This book was written with the objective of sharing some of the most significance experiences that the author has underwent through in managing industrial relation. Important to note that, the experiences elaborated in the book happened within the context of Malaysian manufacturing environment. Therefore, the legal statements mentioned may not be exactly similar if the readers are outside of Malaysia. However, research and studies made by the author revealed that the gist of the Law is still very much the same within the scope of commonwealth countries. All the 35 case studies were extracted from the real life experiences of the author gained during two decades as Head of Human Resource department. The case studies were reflected and analyzed from the author's perspective, with no intention to blame any parties involved. This is not to say that those experiences were the perfect examples of what industrial relation is all about, but the author humbly hopes that it gives an insight of what to expect from the employees or union under similar kind of environments. The author hopes that it will give an insight of how each situation was resolved, or how it should have been resolved better based on the essence of Malaysian Law, which is the Industrial Relation Act. The author has no intention to say that, all the solutions taken were the only way to resolve the issues. Trade disputes can be resolved creatively as long as the solution is procedurally correct and legally right. Again, I humbly apologized if the case studies written in the book offended those who were affected by it.
