Test Prep Books

It is important to have a plan of attack for the entire SAT as well as each individual section.

When the proctor says "You may begin" what do you do? Do you read a passage first?

Or do you read questions first? Should you answer questions in order or should you skip around. If skipping around which questions should you answer first and which ones should you leave for last? These questions and much more will be answered in this book. Having a plan will help you to be more accurate when answering questions, as well as more efficient with how many questions you answer. If you are nervous when testing having a plan helps with this as it takes your mind off of how nervous you are and sets it on what your next move will be. You will be too busy following your plan to be nervous. Simply put, having a plan will help to increase your score. In addition to outlining this plan of attack this book offers other helpful tips such as identifying words or phrases which are usually, or in some cases always, written in to wrong answers. Knowing these will help to increase your accuracy by eliminating more incorrect answers. Also included are two chapters about what to bring to the test and what to expect on test day. Whether you have already spent hours studying for the SAT or you have procrastinated and are beginning to learn about the test right before your test date, "Last Minute Tips for the SAT" will help you to both maximize your accuracy rate to score higher, and your personal efficiency so that you can answer more questions before time runs out.
