Scholars and statesmen have debated the influence of international commerce on war and peace for thousands of years. Over the centuries, analysts have generally treated the questions

"Does international commerce influence security?" and "Do trade flows influence security?" as synonymous. In Producing Security, Stephen Brooks maintains that such an overarching focus on the security implications of trade once made sense but no longer does. Trade is no longer the primary means of organizing international economic transactions; rather, where and how multinational corporations (MNCs) organize their international production activities is now the key integrating force of global commerce. MNC strategies have changed in a variety of fundamental ways over the past three decades, Brooks argues, resulting in an increased geographic dispersion of production across borders. The author shows that the globalization of production has led to a series of shifts in the global security environment. It has a differential effect on security relations, in part because it does not encompass all countries and industries to the same extent. The book's findings indicate that the geographic dispersion of MNC production acts as a significant force for peace among the great powers. The author concludes that there is no basis for optimism that the globalization of production will promote peace elsewhere in the world. Indeed, he finds that it has a net negative influence on security relations among developing countries. Concepts, Theories and Effects, Third Edition Taylor & Francis Transnational Corporations and International Production Concepts, Theories and Effects,

Transnational Corporations and Integrated International Production : an Executive Summary Springer

This publication is part of a new series of current studies on foreign direct investment and development. The series aims to contribute to a better understanding of how transnational corporations (TNCs) and their activities impact on development. This study quantifies and analyses the past and current trends on the degree of internationalisation of the largest TNCs as well as TNCs from developing economies. It shows how some developing economies have emerged as significant actors in international production. Firms from the United States and Germany and firms in the pharmaceutical industry dominate the top of the list of the most transnational TNCs. The United Kingdom and the Netherlands are the locations most favoured by the largest TNCs, and Brazil and Mexico from the developing economies are also among the top hosts.

Is the transnational corporation (TNC) an engine of growth capable of eliminating international economic inequalities or a major obstacle to development through a massive drain of surplus to advanced countries? This book presents five different perspectives on the role of TNCs: Neo-Classical Global Reach Neo-Imperialist Neo-Fundamentalist Internationalization of capital The author looks at their effect on local labour and capital, and considers the future prospects for TNC involvement in the Third World. The book provides an excellent comparative analysis of TNCs and will appeal to students in development studies and international economics. The Universe of the Largest Transnational Corporations United Nations Publications The World Investment Report 2008 presents the latest data on foreign direct investment (FDI) and traces global and regional trends in FDI and in international production by transnational corporations (TNCs). This year's report puts a special focus on the role of TNCs in meeting the huge needs of developing countries for infrastructure such as roads, ports, water, gas and electricity supply, and telecommunications. Drawing on unique data, this year, the Report examines the universe of the largest TNCs investing in infrastructure industries and the increasing role of TNCs from the South in contributing to infrastructure in other developing economies. The Report explores how the participation of TNCs brings benefits, but also entails risks and costs. It considers how the mix of public and private (including TNC) involvement can help spur foreign investment and knowledge transfer to countries that need such inflows. Transnational Corporations and the Infrastructure Challenge New York : United Nations Thoroughly updated and substantially extended, this internationally successful text explores transnational corporations (TNCs), their activities and effects, as well as the theories developed to explain them. Invaluable for courses as well as researchers in international business, international economics, globalization, international relations, economic geography and history of economic thought on the TNCs. From Code of Conduct to Global Compact Taylor & Francis Problems of development in what is normally called the Third World have been a subject matter of concern of the social sciences, especially of economics, for over two decades now. 1 Between the late 1950s and the current time, as Chapter 2 attempts to show, the emphasis seems to have shifted from purely economic considerations of underdevelopment to a paradigm that includes other, extra-economic considerations of a social, political, and cultural nature. The recent emergence of development studies as a new social science discipline stems precisely from the methodological premise that development is a complex process that can only be adequately understood, analyzed, and alleviated by a cross-disciplinary approach instead of a wholly unidisciplinary one. We do not wish to challenge the above proposition. However, it remains of certain economic phenomena that pose problems true that an assessment of to developing countries can offer us greater insights into problems development, including the formulation of appropriate policies aimed at improving socioeconomic conditions in such countries. is restrictive business practices. This study is on One such phenomenon of restrictive business practices as they are concerned mainly with surveying aspects related to problems of development in the Third World. Restrictive business practices are not confined to developing countries; however, limited work seems to have been conducted in terms of relating the concept of restrictive business practices to problems of development. The existing evidence of restrictive business practices in the development process is quite fragmentary.

Sprache: Deutsch, Abstract: Die Internationalisierung der Produktion ist ein zentraler Bestandteil der unaufhaltsam voran schreitenden Globalisierung. Die Weltwirtschafts- und Finanzkrise hat gezeigt, dass der wirtschaftliche Strukturwandel auch die zunehmende Verflechtung von Risiken bedeutet. Grenzüberschreitend aktive Unternehmen, treiben die Herausbildung eines immer dichteren Netzwerkes von transnationalen Produktions- und Wertschöpfungsketten voran. Im Mittelpunkt dieser Hausarbeit steht, warum sich immer mehr Unternehmen international betätigen. Im ersten Teil der Hausarbeit möchte ich relevante Begriffe wie den der Globalisierung und der Direktinvestition kurz definieren. Gegenstand des 3. Kapitels ist die Abgrenzung der multinationalen Unternehmung von internationalen, globalen und transnationalen Unternehmen. Im 4.

Kapitel wird dann kurz die wirtschaftsgeschichtliche Entstehung der multinationalen Unternehmung erläutert. Danach gewähre ich einen Einblick in verschiedene Erklärungstheorien, die versuchen, das Entstehen multinationaler Unternehmen plausibel zu machen. Dabei strebe ich keine Vollständigkeit an, es sollen nur wesentliche Charakterzüge einzelner Theorien hervorgehoben werden. Zum Schluss ziehe ich ein kritisches Fazit über die Entwicklung multinationaler Unternehmen.

This series of books brings together results of an intensive research programme on aspects of the national systems of innovation (NSI) in the five BRICS countries — Brazil, Russia, India, China, and South Africa. It provides a comprehensive and comparative examination of the challenges and opportunities faced by these dynamic and emerging economies. In discussing the impact of innovation with respect to economic, geopolitical, socio-cultural, institutional, and technological systems, it reveals the possibilities of new development paradigms for equitable and sustainable growth. This volume explores the relationship between transnational corporations (TNCs) and NSI across BRICS economies. The essays highlight the role of foreign direct investment (FDI), the evolution of TNCs and examine local factors — such as government policies, human resources, market structures, and technological capabilities — that affect collaborative efforts with indigenous firms towards innovation and development. The authors approach the thesis of technological globalisation with some caution, refuting the idea that research and development (R&D) activities have been inexorably internationalised. Original and detailed data, together with expert analyses on wide-ranging issues, make this book an invaluable resource for researchers and scholars in economics, development studies and political science, in addition to policy makers and development practitioners interested in the BRICS countries. The New Reality Cengage Learning Emea Thoroughly updated and substantially extended, this internationally

Are transnational corporations (TNCs) and foreign direct investment beneficial or harmful to societies around the world? Since the birth of the United Nations more than 60 years ago, these questions have been major issues of interest and involvement for UN institutions. What have been the key ideas generated by the UN about TNCs and their relations with nation-states? How have these ideas evolved and what has been their impact? This book examines the history of UN engagement with TNCs, including the creation of the UN Commission and Centre on Transnational Corporations in 1974, the failed efforts of these bodies to craft a code of conduct to temper the revealed abuses of TNCs, and, with the advent of globalization in the 1980s, the evolution of a more cooperative relationship between TNCs and developing countries, resulting in the 1999 Global Compact.

Recent years have seen a dramatic increase in international production worldwide, accompanied by considerable changes in its geographical structure. This volume examines the role of transnational corporations (TNCs) in the geography of international production, covering both theoretical and empirical aspects, and drawing conclusions for future policy-making. This work will be essential to scholars, policy-makers and professionals in the areas of international business strategy, international economics and political science.

The involvement of non-state actors in world politics can hardly be characterised as novel, but intensifying economic and social exchange and the emergence of new modes of international governance have given them much greater visibility and, many would argue, a more central role. Non-state Actors in World Politics offers analyses of a diverse range of economic, social, legal (and illegal), old and new actors, such as the Catholic Church, trade unions, diasporas, religious movements, transnational corporations and organised crime.
