 Red Letter Secondhand Books was my second home during high school. When you walk in, well, it's really quite impossible to describe. While it is somewhat hard to find your way around your first couple times, the time you spend wandering is really quite interesting. I ended up buying tons of books I would of otherwise seen.

 "When I was reading to a little girl at [Denver Health] Westwood Clinic last week, there were two preschool-aged boys who kept racing through the reading corner, but who could not be coaxed into looking at the book or listening. Their father was sitting in the waiting area with a three-month baby boy in his lap.
