Excavations At Tell El Balamun

Excavations At Tell El Balamun It was the ancient form of the name of Balamun. Tell el-Balamun, located in an agricultural area in the Nile Delta, it was a port city of an estuary of the Nile (but is now 15 kilometres (9.3 mi) from the Mediterranean Sea due to the advance of the Nile delta). It was the site of a complex of temples. Tell el-Balamun - Wikipedia The excavation aims to illustrate the history and development of the major Egyptian city of Tell el-Balamun and its relationship to the surrounding environment. To better understand the site, the project seeks to discover how the ancient city was divided up into different areas for official use, public monuments or private housing. British Museum - Excavation in Egypt at Tell el-Balamun The archaeological site of Tell el-Balamun lies in the middle of typical agricultural land of the Egyptian Delta, at Latitude 31 15 31N, 31 34 17E. The site consists of an area of undulating mounds, over a kilometre in diameter, and rising to a maximum elevation of almost 18 metres above the surrounding fields. British Museum - Introduction to the site of Tell el-Balamun Excavation in Egypt at Tell el-Balamun The Magnetic Survey. The geophysical survey in Tell el-Balamun was a joint project of the British Museum and the Polish Center of Mediterranean Archaeology, intended to map the whole area of the temple enclosure.
