How do we teach elementary students to independently use the different elements of craft that are discussed and taught in lessons? We begin by honoring the reality that terms like voice, sentence fluency, and writing with detail are descriptions of where we want our students to be, not next steps on how to reach those goals. In Crafting Writers, K-6 Elizabeth Hale shows us how to identify specific elements of craft when assessing student work and planning instruction, and use them to teach students the specific craft techniques that will move them forward as writers. Liz offers practical information that teachers can use immediately in their classrooms. She also presents a concrete process for noticing craft in writing so teachers can develop and plan craft lessons based on their students' writing. Learning the techniques that make up good writing also allows teachers to see craft in many different levels of writing, a skill that is particularly powerful when conferring with below-grade-level writers. Additional chapters look closely at assessment and classroom management practices like group conferring. Most of us know good writing when we read it, but writing teachers need to know what makes it work. Filled with easy-to-use charts, and practical lessons, Crafting Writers, K-6 provides clear insight into identifying and teaching the small elements that make good writing successful. Jane was an aspiring writer, who, like everyone else before her, parachuted fearlessly into the writing jungle. And, like everybody else, she got hung up on a tree with her parachute. That tree was the sub craft How to Write in Limited POV. Looking around, she notices a hundred more trees on which other aspiring writers are hung up. She cuts the parachute lines, drops to the ground, makes a summersault forward, and jumps to her feet. Around her, writers of all ages are cutting paths through the thicket. "Help?" She calls out. Well-meant answers arrive from all directions. "Create an interesting character and give her a great goal." "Write what you want to read." "Create a sense of wonder." "The more conflict, the better." "Don't write to get published, grab the reader." "Be captivating. Or memorable." "Keep the reader turning pages." "Be unpredictable and keep the reader curious." Jane scans the area. She can't see more than ten meters into the thicket. How she wishes she had a map and a navigation system. Five years later, Jane is still cutting her way through the writing wilderness. She has climbed eighty-one writing skill trees, crossed the suspense valley, ascended the romance mountain, and walked the Hero's Journey track, but the storytelling jungle remains a tangle. How she wishes she had a map and a navigation system. Most books about writing specialize in one, two, or three crafts, but none focuses on the overview (yep, that's a paradox). Until now. The map and navs are finally here: The Eight Crafts of Writing and the supplementary book The Eight Crafts Navigation System.
